

ABSTRACT

A revolutionary method in optical system design uses the digital-signal-processing power of image chips to correct the aberrations of the lens, thereby reducing the number of lens required. The optical module (including lens and image chip) built this way will be cheaper and smaller.